Old-Age Pensions.

The passage of an old-age pension bill for all French workmen by the Chamber of Dopulies suggests the question whether such a system of providing for the deserving poor who have outlived their usefulness will over be adopted in this country. It will searcely do to take a negative answer for granted, in view of the fact that an old-age pension law was carnestly advocated in Massachusetts some months ago, and the State bureau of statistics of labor, after making an exhaustive inquiry, reported that the State's present expendi-
